IMPORTANT NOTE: At the time of research, records relating to homes run by the Catholic Church were archived in various locations. However, at the time of writing, the majority of records were being centralised at the newly established Professional Standards Office Records Service of the Catholic Church. Please contact this service for information about records it now holds.

Other records are held at State Records of South Australia and by the different orders responsible for the running of the homes. Some general historical records previously held by the Adelaide Catholic Archdiocesan Archives may be returned after review by the new Records Service. All access conditions and contact details for each of these collections appear at the end of the section.

In connection with the detention of girls at Barton Vale, it is recommended that the inmates of that Institution of the Roman Catholic Faith should be removed to a separate Institution. Before this can be done, it would be necessary to proclaim a Reformatory School for girls of the Roman Catholic Religion. I understand that a property in Young Street, Parkside, owned by Roman Catholic authorities (the house which was occupied by Dr Sweetapple) is empty. It contains 12 rooms, and would, with slight renovations, be a suitable place to accommodate the girls in question...I strongly recommend that action be taken to secure this home, and have it proclaimed an Institution under the Maintenance Act, 1926, as a Reformatory School for Girls of the Roman Catholic Religion.

Address: 21 Young Street, Parkside

HISTORY

This home for Catholic girls was opened in August 1930 in a twelve roomed house already owned by the Catholic Church. It was named after a village in Italy where a miraculous picture of the Virgin Mary, is venerated. No explanation for this name is recorded, but it has been suggested that the name was chosen in the hope that the home would be protected by Mary. The establishment of this new reformatory had been encouraged by the chairman of the Children's Welfare and Public Relief Department. He wished to relocate the ten Roman Catholic girls detained in the Salvation Army managed Barton Vale Probationary Home for Girls to a separate Catholic reformatory. There they would be able to receive religious training in their own faith. These girls had mostly come from the Redruth Girls Reformatory which had closed in 1922. The new home at Parkside operated under the direction of the Archbishop of Adelaide and was managed by the Sisters of St Joseph. The first matron was Sister Francis Clare. The home was also under the control of the Children's Welfare and Public Relief Board which paid a subsidy to the reformatory to cover the complete cost of the care of the girls. In 1930 this sum was £1 per girl per week. During the Second World War the girls received correspondence school lessons and were given instruction in first aid and air raid precautions. This small home could only house ten girls at one time and was always regarded as temporary. On 21 January 1943 it closed and the girls were transferred to the Convent of the Good Shepherd at Plympton.

The accommodation is strained, rather to provide for nineteen girls. The number would not be so high were it not for the difficulty of obtaining situations for the girls in Roman Catholic homes, for there are several girls who could go out to service if places could be found for them. There has been very little sickness among the girls, who, on the whole, have behaved very well indeed. The institution is kept in splendid order, and the inmates are well cared for and receive good religious, moral and practical training.

HISTORY

During the 1870s and early 1880s Sister Mechtilde Woods and a colleague from the St Joseph's convent made regular visits to Catholic children in the Girls Reformatory at Magill. During these visits they became concerned that Catholic girls in the institution were being discouraged from practicing their faith. In addition they learned that several girls had been boarded out with non-Catholic families. Two particular girls had even been compelled to give up their faith. Over the next decade, the Catholic Church lobbied the government to do something about this situation. It was not until 1895 that a new Act was proclaimed allowing the State Children's Council to send State Children of particular religious denominations to private reformatories subsidised by the government. This allowed the Catholic Church to establish a separate reformatory for Catholic girls. The State Children's Council requested that the reformatory be set up away from the City. An old chapel and house, five kilometres from the town of Kapunda, were renovated and the new reformatory was gazetted as an Industrial School under the State Children's Act of 1895. Sister Helena O'Brien was appointed matron and she, along with four other sisters, moved to Kapunda to prepare the residence. The first group of ten girls arrived in June 1897.

During the first two years a large number of the girls made escape attempts. Some were successful. In 1899 a second class dormitory and a number of cells were added to accommodate escapees and other girls whose conduct was considered unsatisfactory. A number of girls 'whose behaviour improved' were placed in service with Catholic families. Due to a lack of government funding to keep the reformatory operating, as well as problems associated with the appointment of a resident chaplain, it was closed in 1909 by Archbishop O'Reily. The eleven girls resident at that time were transferred to the Redruth Girls Reformatory at Burra. During the twelve years of its existence a total of 85 girls were accommodated at the Reformatory, 59 of those were readmitted for a second term. After the reformatory closed the buildings were dismantled and the contents sold at auction. Today nothing remains of the reformatory or the chapel, only several original trees still exist.

Girls committed to this home are accommodated in good wholesome surroundings, and keen interest is taken in their welfare by the matron and staff. During the week days the girls are fully occupied with various phases of laundry work, and their leisure hours are carefully provided for by means of concerts and other features. A five days 'Retreat' was conducted, the girls receiving instruction in all branches of ethics. New features of the home include an amateur dramatic society, a single sheet news bulletin, to which the girls contribute articles of topical or cultural interest, and the introduction of basketball and educational films. During the year the girls presented an operetta entitle 'Laila'.

Home of the Good Shepherd

Run by: The Catholic Church – Order of the Good Shepherd Sisters under the control of the Children's Welfare and Public Relief Board and its successors

Address: 336 Marion Road, Plympton

HISTORY

In 1941 the Good Shepherd Sisters were asked by the Archbishop of Adelaide to establish a home in Adelaide for teenage girls with 'behavioural problems'. The convent was established in a large home in Plympton called The Pines, originally owned by the John Martin family. Set on nineteen acres of grounds, it was remodelled to accommodate up to eighty children. Many of the girls admitted to the home were under the care of the Children's Welfare Department, although the Good Shepherd sisters did also take in girls who were not wards of the State.

Three sisters originally ran the home. Later they were joined by five more as the number of girls increased. The first seven children to be placed in the home were transferred from the care of the Sisters of St Joseph, when their home for Catholic girls at Parkside closed in January 1943.

In the late 1960s institutional-style dormitory accommodation was replaced by smaller group care. In 1974 a decision was taken to phase out residential care due to the increasing complexity of referrals and the limitations of large institutional buildings.

Sacred Heart Orphanage

GENERAL INFORMATION

Years of operation: 1940-1979

Also known as: No other names

Run by: Good Samaritan Sisters – Catholic Church

Address: Eyre Road, Crystal Brook, South Australia

HISTORY

This orphanage was originally established to cater for children in need whose fathers had been killed during World War II. Other than the children's home at the Umeewarra Mission near Port Augusta, it was the only home in the north of the state. In the 1970s an agreement was signed with the Department of Community Welfare and government assistance was provided to the institution. This funding allowed the orphanage to accommodate any boys and girls between the ages of 4 and 15 who needed short or long term care. It normally catered for up to twenty children under the care of three staff members. While living at the orphanage, the children were educated at the Parish School, St Stanislaus.

The orphanage building still exists today and the premises operates as the Sacred Heart Home, a boarding hostel for students.

St John's Boys Town

This institution is a monument of Father Healy's zeal and devotion to his work. He and the lay brothers who assist him spare no pains to benefit the boys or to comply with the wishes of the Council. Their work demands patience, and may sometimes seem slow, but the boys sent from there usually retain their situations and do well.

Address: Marshall Terrace, Brooklyn Park

HISTORY

Father John Healy of the Thebarton parish founded this reformatory home in 1898 to provide alternative accommodation for Catholic boys committed to the government reformatory at Magill. It was run by a new order, the Brothers of St John the Baptist, established by Healy in 1892 and made official in 1922.

Although numbers of residents were consistent in the early years, by 1941 there were only 4-5 boys in the reformatory. That year too the home ceased to operate as a registered government reformatory and was no longer under the control of the Children's Welfare and Public Relief Board. The reformatory was renamed St John's Boys Town and as part of a rationalisation of the prevailing situation in Adelaide, it was decided that the Brothers of St John the Baptist would look after older boys.

By 1942 the number of boys in care had risen to almost fifty. Internal problems within the order, combined with some behaviour management issues within the home, led to the handing over of control by command of the Archbishop. The Salesians of Don Bosco replaced the Brothers of St John the Baptist. The order of the Brothers of St John the Baptist was suppressed and ceased to operate. Several options were offered to the remaining brothers, which included transfer to another religious congregation. On taking over, the Salesian priests and brothers applied to alter the name and rules of the home to put a new focus on education and training. Around 1953-1954 full authority to accept day-boys for both technical and secondary studies was granted and the name 'Boys Town' was discontinued. A new building was erected so that the number of residents could be increased. The Salesians were particular about the boys they would accommodate, preferring to take boys over the age of ten with at least grade five standard education. The home became known as 'the boarding section of Salesian School' and in the mid 1960s the school was referred to as the 'Salesian College'. St Johns Boys Home closed at the end of 1984. Salesian College finished as a co-educational secondary school at the end of 1996.

St Joseph's Orphanage Largs Bay

I am only too happy to fall in with any arrangement you will make about the Orphanage. My sympathies were never much with the Sanatorium. Though a good work it seemed to work for the benefit of the rich, and not for the poor who are our special charge. But for the orphans whose loss we felt so deeply to come to us again is a great pleasure.

Letter from Mary McKillop to Archbishop O'Reilly, 26 June 1906 as quoted in Marie Therese Foale, 'Think of the Ravens: The Sisters of St Joseph in Social Welfare' (Sisters of St Joseph of the Sacred Heart Inc, Kent Town, 2001), p. 21

Established in 1903, the St Joseph's orphanage was the second orphanage to be managed by the Sisters of St Joseph. It began as a sanatorium or rest home for women and children needing respite and 'the benefits of sea air'. The first building had eight rooms and an ocean view and soon became very popular. Due to the demand for accommodation the institution moved to a larger premises on the Esplanade near the Largs Bay jetty in 1906. Although the home continued for a time to accommodate women, the sisters began to concentrate on its role as an orphanage for boys and girls from infancy to school leaving age. By 1908 even the larger building was becoming overcrowded so a cottage on an adjoining lot was purchased. In 1910 sixty-two children were being cared for in the orphanage and by 1912 the sisters were running out of room for the numbers of children being referred to them. Over the next few years a number of additions were made to the building, including a schoolroom in 1912 and a kitchen and laundry in 1917.

In 1941, after the arrival of Archbishop Matthew Beovich in Adelaide, the focus of the Orphanage changed. The Archbishop arranged for all the older boys from the orphanages at Goodwood and Largs Bay to be placed at Brooklyn Park under the care of the Brothers of St John the Baptist and later the Salesians of Don Bosco. All girls were moved to the St Vincent de Paul orphanage and St Joseph's took charge of boys aged between three and twelve.

During the 1960s the home accommodated up to sixty boys under the care of seven nuns. At that time the institution was also known as the Junior Boys Home. Boys were accommodated in three dormitories, divided by their age. They were educated at a kindergarten and school run by three resident registered school teachers. They also received religious instruction from the resident Chaplain.

From 1969 a small number of girls were admitted and one of the dormitories was set aside for their use. The home then became known as St Joseph's Children's Home. During 1973-1974 the original building was converted into four self-contained group units, each accommodating eight children between the ages of two and fifteen. Each group was cared for by a house-mother. Three of the units had the capacity to house two extra children in an emergency. During the 1970s children remained in the home for periods ranging between three weeks and three years. While resident they attended local schools. Until its closure at the end of 1980 St Josephs continued to provide unit style accommodation for children from infancy to seventeen years of age.

St Joseph's Refuge, Fullarton

To the question, 'What is the qualification for admission?' the sister in charge will reply, 'None whatsoever, other than the applicant is in distress'...'We save fully 95 per cent of those who come to us,' the Archbishop remarked. 'One third of them come for protection. They have not fallen, but they wish to be saved from falling. In some cases the parents cannot control them, but the sisters have no trouble with them here. For 36 years the institution has been at work, and we have never had a case of infectious disease, such as diphtheria. In the last 10 years, 300 babies have been born in the institution, but only in one case did the mother die. We do not force an inmate to attend our church services, and ministers of other denominations may visit members of their flock who are inmates.'

HISTORY

St Joseph's Refuge was the second institution established by the Catholic Church in South Australia. Its foundation was inspired by reports by the Sisters of St Joseph about the number of Catholic women they had encountered on visiting the Adelaide Gaol. Many of these women wished to reform themselves but had no support to do so. The sisters believed that given a nurturing, spiritual environment - as well as shelter and care - these young women, some of whom were unmarried mothers, could be given a second chance. A number of women who urgently needed help were accommodated in temporary homes. In October 1867 Archdeacon Patrick Russell called a meeting of leading members of the Catholic community in Adelaide. As a result of this gathering a rented premises was secured in Franklin Street, Adelaide, to be set up as a Catholic Female Refuge. In May 1868 the Sisters of St Joseph took charge of the institution. Initially 24 women were in residence, eleven of whom the sisters had removed from the Gaol. The institution supported itself through laundry work. The refuge cared for women of all denominations for as long as they required shelter and no payment for accommodation was requested.

From Franklin Street the Refuge moved to a larger rented house at Mitcham with enough rooms to accommodate twenty women. In 1872 it transferred to an even larger premises near the St Ignatius Church in Queen Street, Norwood. Due to the success of the laundry work the Refuge had a small sum of money saved. This combined with a charitable bequest allowed the church to purchase an eleven-acre property, formerly a Jam Factory, at Fullarton. New buildings were erected including a lying-in home, a children's cottage and a modern laundry which would provide the funding for the running of the refuge for years to come. The Fullarton Refuge was officially opened on 22 September 1901. By 1911 the refuge was home to 86 women, 36 children and 18 sisters. At the turn of the century the emphasis of the refuge changed from sheltering former prisoners from the Adelaide Gaol to caring for unmarried mothers and their children.

*Louise Place 2005,
Courtesy Kay Goodman-Dodd*

The identity of each woman admitted to the refuge was carefully protected. On arriving each was given a name other than her true Christian name and during her stay she was only known by that pseudonym. Her real identity was recorded in a locked register which still survives. While embracing the Catholic faith was not a pre-requisite of residence, all women were expected to work. Mothers were allowed to remain until their child reached three years of age. At that time, if the women wished to remain at the Refuge, the child was transferred to the Orphanage at Largs Bay. By the early 1930s it was reported that some 6000 children and adults had passed through the Refuge since its establishment.

In 1963 control of the Refuge was transferred from the Sisters of St Joseph to the Daughters of Charity. In the 1970s it was not only catering for unmarried mothers but also for other women requiring residential care. These included deserted wives and their children and girls in need of protective care. The Refuge still operates today under the management of Centacare and is known as Louise Place.

GENERAL INFORMATION

Years of operation: 1956-1978

Also known as: The Polish Orphanage,
St Stanislaus Children's Home

Run by: Resurrection Sisters

Address: 30 George Street, Royal Park

HISTORY

Opened in 1956 this home was named for its patron, a young Jesuit, Stanislaus Kostka. Its establishment was inspired and sponsored by Polish migrants who had recently immigrated to Australia and settled in Adelaide. With the help of the Polish community, Polish American nuns were brought out to Australia to work in the home. St Stanislaus House provided accommodation for up to fifty children. It housed orphans, children from broken homes and children whose mothers were ill or forced to go out to work. A pre-school and kindergarten were run within the home while older children attended the local Catholic primary school. In 1970 childcare policies changed and there was a move towards cottage-style accommodation. Due to lack of staff to care for children under this new system, the home was closed. The Resurrection sisters still reside at the home and run a day care centre for children.

St Vincent De Paul Orphanage

Yes I thoroughly enjoyed polishing the floors of the dormitory, especially on a Saturday. It was great because the beds would all be moved aside and we — Not having any polishers you had a pile of girls in rows. It might have been about a dozen girls up there, and so many would be waxers and they'd get down on their hands and knees, knee pads on them, or something laid out you kneel on, and then you'd just go down all in a row polishing. I liked being the shiner and putting these rags all around our feet and slipping up and down. Everything was done in a foot movement sort of thing. Of course when the nun's back was turned we were sliding on our backsides and ripping our pants and tearing dresses. You know anything for a bit of fun. I think a lot of children did it and that. They moaned about having to wax but we enjoyed it.

HISTORY

In the mid 1800s some members of the Catholic Church became concerned that orphans of the faith under government care were often placed with non-Catholic families. They believed that these children's spiritual welfare needed to be protected through the establishment of a Catholic orphanage. The orphanage was funded via a statewide appeal and initially opened in 1866 in a rented house in King William Street, Adelaide. The institution was managed by a board which included Catholic priests and laymen. The first premises were soon found to be too small and the children were moved to a new, larger, building in Walkerville on the corner of Walkerville and Park Terraces. At Walkerville a lay matron took charge of the thirty children in the home.

During 1867 the government approached the Catholic church and pressured them to give shelter to Catholic children from the badly overcrowded state orphanage situated at that time in the Grace Darling Hotel at Brighton. That year the St Vincent de Paul Orphanage was gazetted as an industrial school so that the government could pay a subsidy for each child admitted. In the first half of 1867 thirty-eight children moved from Brighton to Walkerville. As the government sent more children to the Walkerville home, it too was found to be too small for the demand. A building known as Boston Cottages on King William Street South was leased and opened as a branch orphanage for the girls. Children accommodated there, although under the direct care of a lay matron, were supervised by of the Sisters of St Joseph. In June 1868 the girls moved again to a row of cottages on the corner of Franklin and Grey Streets in the City. At this time a number of the Sisters moved in to care for them. The boys were also moved to these premises in August 1868.

During this period government sponsorship became intermittent and in 1872 ceased completely. However, the orphanage continued to run supported entirely by the church. In 1872 the children were moved from the City to a premises in Mitcham, recently vacated by the Refuge, which provided grounds as well as a building. Three years later a larger house was secured in Burnside and the children moved once again. They remained there until 1889 when they made their final move to a 12-13 acre (5 hectares) property secured by the Adelaide Archbishop in Mitchell Street, Goodwood. The residence was renovated and new buildings added. One year later the Sisters of Mercy took over the running of the orphanage by the order of Archbishop Reynolds. During the early 1900s further additions were made so that the home could accommodate up to 120 children. Another new wing was opened in 1924. By 1960 ninety-nine children were resident in the orphanage. This number dropped to 52 in 1970 and at its closure in 1975, only 20 children were in residence.

Three further interviews held in the JD Somerville collection, OH199, OH73 and OH138 also concern the Orphanage.

PHOTOGRAPHS - State Library of SA

Goodwood Orphanage Oral History OH201 includes an associated series of 72 photographs.

PHOTOGRAPHS - Adelaide Catholic Archdiocesan Archives

The Catholic Archives holds a number of photographs of the orphanage building.

The background of the page is a faded, light-colored illustration of a beach scene. In the foreground, there are several people standing on the sand. One person on the left is holding a long pole or stick. In the middle ground, there is a large, dark, rectangular object that looks like a fishing net or a piece of equipment. The background shows a calm sea and a bright sky.

STATE RECORDS OF SA

Access conditions

Although some early records relating to institutions for children in South Australia are open access, many later records are subject to restrictions. Records which contain personal information about individuals are usually restricted for at least sixty years from the date of their creation. More sensitive records, such as adoption files, are restricted for up to eighty years. Written permission must be obtained from the government agency which created the record in order to access restricted material. In the case of records relating to children, the agency responsible is the Adoption and Family Information Service of the Department for Families and Communities.

A Research Centre Members card, obtainable at the Archives, is required to research records held at State Records. State Records has signed a Memorandum of Understanding with SA Link-Up.
